The Stenographer's Share

THE "lion's share" of the cost of your typewritten letters goes into your stenographer's pay envelope.

One stenographer at $15 a week (or $780 per year) costs 4% on $19,500.

In other words, you are investing approximately 4% on $20,000 in the bank—to pay ONE STENOGRAPHER'S SALARY.

NOT A SORDID PROJECT

San Francisco and California did not launch the enterprise of a great international exposition with a view of making it profitable, financially. It is not a sordid project. And yet, on the other hand, it is not so idealistic that the exposition management is averse to having the exposition be a financial success, which it has been in the first month that its gates have been open, says an exchange. Its net receipts for the month were more than $85,000. The primary objects of the exposition are: To foster artistic taste; to enlighten and educate; to draw nations and peoples closer together in friendship and peace. But another perfectly legitimate purpose is to promote closer commercial relations with other nations. While not an enterprise commercialistic in the sordid, repellant signification of this term, yet the exposition properly may be and is a potent promoter of commercial expansion.

International law is something that all civilized nations highly respect and uphold—in times of profound peace.

oppressed and downtrodden and that an attempt was always made to turn the scale of justice in his favor, ignoring the rights of the employer who should be given the same protection as the employee. That before the law all men were equal. The employee had the same right as the employer and no more. Nor could he understand legislation imposing conditions on one set of employers and exempting others.

After further debate the bill was referred back to the judiciary committee of the senate from where it is surmised it will be difficult to recall it.

A joint session of the oil committee of both houses was held Thursday night to give a hearing to the proponents and opponents of Senate Bill 1258, placing the oil industry under the jurisdiction of the railroad commission and giving the commission authority to limit and prohibit the production and storage of oil, in accordance with the demands of the market. Proponents of the bill, representing largely the Independent Oil Producers association, claimed that their object was to conserve the supply under ground and prevent economic waste which amounted by evaporation and otherwise to about five per cent of the annual product. Under questions from Assemblyman Joe C. Burke of Orange county, however, they admitted that another principal object of the bill was to raise the price of oil. Among the opponents of the bill was Adolph Mack of San Francisco, representing his own company, the Imperial Oil company, the Standard, Associated, Shell, and a long list of other larger companies. Mr. Mack's contention was that it was not possible for the commission to regulate so complex a product as oil. Some wells were very productive of gasoline oil, while others were productive of the many by-products from crude oil. The demand for one or more by-products might be heavy and for other products less, and asked how the commission was to determine which of these wells should be shut down. Furthermore, that a great majority of oil companies were doing business on borrowed capital, and that if compelled to shut down their production their securities would be rendered valueless and banks would withhold loans. He contended that the proposed legislation was too radical and established a precedent that might be extended to other products, not only gold, coal, lumber, etc., but might as well be applied to the producers of cotton, raisins and other products when the demand was low.

Another representative of the Shell interests declared that they were setting up a bug-a-boo of over-production and showed by statistics that the present supply of oil above ground comprising approximately 60,000,000 barrels would, if production were limited or prohibited, supply even the present curtailed demand for not over five months. If regulation is necessary it seems to be the consensus of opinion among the majority of the larger interests to place this industry under the jurisdiction of the state mining bureau.

There is talk now of a special session to consider the impeachment case of Superior Judge Childs of Del Norte, whose preliminary examination is now being conducted by a subcommittee from the assembly. May 6th has been tentatively fixed as the day for final adjournment, but if the committee recommends the trial of Judge Childs the session will drag along to two or three weeks more during which time the legislators will draw no pay. Hence it is quite possible that the session will adjourn as soon as the legislative business is concluded and reassemble under a call for a special session in order that they may draw their salaries for the time occupied in the impeachment proceedings.

RIGHT KIND OF "MOONSHINERS"

In rural communities of Kentucky, Georgia, North Carolina and Alabama they are putting moonlight to a better use than the illicit distillation of whiskey. "Moonlight" schools are bringing crowds of adults to the little cross-roads schoolhouses every night to make up for the deficiencies of their early education. The eagerness to acquire knowledge on the part of some of those who are illiterate by no fault of their own, is patriotic. Among the pupils are graybeards of seventy, still yearning to know as much as the average day-school child.

A CRUSHER

Boston Boy—My own parents consider such childish performances frivolous in the extreme; they encourage, however, my frequent attendance at the motion picture resorts, considering that form of entertainment most highly educational!

A HIGH SENSE OF HONOR

However, don't be like the man I heard of who said he had only one enemy in town and someone asked him how that was. "Well," he said, "it was like this. I sold him a horse and two or three days afterwards he came back and said, 'Hiram, why didn't you tell me that horse had the measles?' 'Well,' I said, 'the man that sold him to me didn't tell me that he had the measles and I thought it was a secret.'"—H. H. Bigelow.

PROGRESS

I cannot sing the old songs,
I sang long years ago,
Because Maria takes me nights
To the moving picture show.
I cannot take my fiddle
And play the way I feel,
Because she trots me down town
To see the latest reel.
I cannot play the old games
Of draughts or cards or chess,
Because the newest photoplay
I must see, I confess.
But what's the use of pining
For the sports of long ago?
The sports of days we didn't have
The motion picture show.

BASEBALL AT VERDUGO PARK

The ball game at Verdugo park Sunday was more of a swatfest than a ball game and as usual the visiting team did most of the "swatting" and defeated the local team with a score of 9 to 11 in a ten-inning game. Neither team had their regular lineup and had to fill in with raw recruits from the small audience. This is the third straight defeat for the Glendale club on their own grounds, but they have this much to their credit—they have forced their opponents into extra innings before they could score the winning run.

It seemed as if the local team is lacking in what it termed in baseball as "skull" practice, and until Manager Hughes drills his team in the finer points in a ball game, they will not be able to play the game as they should. There are many times in a ball game that intricate plays come up, and in order to handle them quickly and accurately, the players must thoroughly understand each other and study the inside workings of the game in order to make the sport interesting.

In Sunday's game bad coaching in the ninth inning lost the game for the local boys, with the score 9 to 9 at the beginning of the ninth inning. The visitors failed to score in their half and for the locals Van Osdoll was first up and was safe on an infield bunt coupled with a wild throw to first. Then Morse hit safe and took second on the wild throw to first. Van Osdoll was allowed by the third base coaches to run past third and was an easy out at home, while if he had been held on third he could have scored the winning run on Gossman's sacrifice fly.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL AND THE RAILROADS

The United States postmaster-general has no intention, evidently, of permitting the railroads to have the last word with relation to the alleged injustice done them by the government in the matter of compensation for mail carriage. Replying to some recent strictures on his policy, his latest statement on the subject contends that all the facts warrant the conclusion that in transporting the mails the railroads are generally fairly paid, and that in some instances they receive compensation beyond the worth of the service rendered. The postmaster-general in this connection reiterates his charge that the railroads sometimes carry express at cheaper rates than they carry mail matter, and he says that frequently the postoffice department sends empty mail bags by express as a means of saving money.

To put the matter more specifically, he instances the through mail service between New York and Chicago. Of these through mails, it is explained, more than 100,000 pounds average daily weight represents what is called competitive mails; that is, they may be forwarded by either of the principal through lines, and therefore are subject to equalization agreement. The department pays the railroads for these mails at the rate of $903,359 a year. If it paid them at the rate they would receive as their share of the charge if these mails were carried by express, they would receive only $452,352 a year. Under the present system, Mr. Burleson claims, the department is helpless in such a case, and cannot avail itself of the advantage that would accrue by reason of more economical handling of the mails. It is for the continuance of this system, he charges, the railroads are now contending. It is partly with the view of putting an end to this system that the department is urging the adoption of a space rather than a weight basis as means of determining compensation for mail carriage.

But it does not follow from Mr. Burleson's discoveries that the express rates are adequate. There is a widespread and well-supported impression that for many years the express companies have been a burden upon rather than a help to the railroads. Until quite recently the express companies could show profits and pay dividends and extra dividends calculated to put the railroads and their managements to the blush. Unless all the evidence has been deceptive the express companies were for many years treated with most extraordinary consideration by the railway companies. To such a degree was this apparent, indeed, that while the railroads were reporting deficits the express companies which they accommodated were reporting handsome surpluses.

It would be well, we think, if the postoffice department should ascertain whether or not the express companies are paying a fair price to the railroads even now before seeking the same rates as are granted the express companies.
